Reconstructing Indo-European Prehistory: Lessons from Linguistics, Archaeology, and Genetics

Abstract

The symposium entitled “Reconstructing Indo-European Prehistory: Lessons from Linguistics, Archaeology, and Genetics”, jointly organized by the Scuola Superiore Sant’Anna and the Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, brings together internationally renowned experts from these three disciplines. The symposium aims to introduce the audience – especially those who are not experts in these fields – to a fascinating story of successful integration between three apparently distant disciplines, which have managed to forge a common language and mutually complement each other. Of course, as is always the case with hypotheses dealing with scientific analyses, the debate is – and should remain – open.
